TRIO Talent Search Provides Participants with Cultural and Educational Experiences

Seventh and eighth grade Talent Search participants from Admiral Moorer Middle School enjoyed lunch at Red Robin Restaurant after seeing a performance of Ain't Misbehavin' at the Alabama Shakespeare Festival.

TRiO Educational Talent Search (ETS) at Wallace Community College has recently been busy with cultural and educational enrichment activities. Two groups of seventh and eighth grade participants had the opportunity to see Broadway performers bring to life music from the 1920's and 1930's in a theatrical production of Ain't Misbehavin' at the Alabama Shakespeare Festival in Montgomery, Alabama.

Sixth-graders from Abbeville Elementary School visited the Flint RiverQuarium in Albany, Georgia to participate in a lab class, complete a scavenger hunt, and view a related movie in the Imagination Theater.

Choosing to Endure Instead of to Fail

“A lot of people still think of failure as a sign of personal incompetence and try to avoid it at all cost,” said Andrew Filev, CEO and founder of Wrike, a software firm in Mountain View, California. “But when you view building a business as a series of experiments, you start to see failure as an inevitable step in the process.” (By Sarah Cruddas “The Hidden Psychology of Failures” 24 March 2016)

If such is true for the business world, can we hold the same true for academia? I suggest it depends on how you view failure. If you are experiencing failing grades in your classes to the point of feeling defeated and hopeless, your perspective may need changing. To change your perspective, you must view failing grades differently.

For instance, at first glance at this picture, one may see two horses competing on the beach, but from a different perspective, you may see only one horse fighting itself. Failing is similar if you analyze the effects of failing. Does failing influence your external environment or does it influence how you compete against self? In other words, are you concerned about how others feel about you or are you focused totally on self-determination?

If you change your focus toward self-determination, your failing will move you toward different techniques by exploring other means to acquire success just like the business industry. Failing in the business world causes the industry to explore other means to create the outcome they want. Even Apple with Steve Jobs experienced failures trying to create iPod. So I encourage you to take the business approach and endure your failures by creating better means of preparing for classes to acquire success. If others can succeed, so can you! Tell yourself after the failure—What's Next!
